

Mokena Property Owners Opposed To Paving Plan

Mokena property owners are at present much worked up over the report that the village board is contemplating having the principal streets of the village concreted, the work to be done on the special assessment plan. The property owners are much opposed to this plan on the ground that the special assessment rate and the high village taxes will make the burden too great for the average small property owner to meet. In some instances the small property owner would find that he had to pay a greater tax and assessment than his property is worth.

This measure is impractical and should be defeated. If the village council does go ahead with it, a number of property owners threaten to take out an injunction to tie up the proposition.

Let us get the opinions of our tax payers on this matter. Send in your opinions on this measure to The News-Bulletin. This paper is opposed to the matter on the basis of the unjustness of the project as it would mean too big a burden. If the village were free from all indebtedness and had a low tax rate then the concrete paving idea could hardly be entertained. This project is all right in towns that are larger than Mokena and where property is of higher value.

The streets of Mokena can all be put in good shape at far less than concrete paving would cost. Before any paving is thought of a sewer system should first be considered.

"KEEP SMILING" AND SHOW OTHERS YOU'RE HAPPY AND CONTENT HERE

Smiles are the basis of this article. Start reading it with a smile and we'll have you smiling your best when you reach the last word. If we succeed in doing that, then we know our efforts have not been in vain. For, we're backing the business and professional interests of Oak Lawn and their campaign to keep everybody happy while they're living in this great town.

Their message appears on the back page of this issue. And its wording is so contagious it not only brought merry wrinkles around our eyes but urged us to write our "little piece"—relative to smiles—here on the front page.

Much to Smile About

Truly, as the merchants' message suggests, we Oak Lawn residents have much to smile about. Oak Lawn has been—and with your cooperation—will always be everything we have ever expected of it in the way of Progressiveness, Community Spirit, Neighborliness and general Good Fellowship. Its Prosperity is a fact. So why shouldn't we smile?

Then too, the man or woman who never smiles never has very many friends. And no person can ever have too many friends. A smile is the best way to win them, either in business or in social relations.

Yes, and a smile can do much in winning prestige for Oak Lawn and the people in it. As our merchants say—let's all

"KEEP SMILING!"

(This is the sixth message from the Oak Lawn Business People to be published in this paper. Look for it on the back page and then read it!)

Chas. Peters Named Administrator

Charles Peters has been named administrator of the estate of his father, Charles F. Peters of Frankfort, who died January 6, without leaving a will.

According to court records the estate consists of approximately $9,300 in personal property, a house and lot in Frankfort, and 160 acres of farmland in Ward county, North Dakota.

The property will be divided according to law among three sons, William, Charles and John, and one daughter, Martha.

Candidate for Collector

Fred E. Yunker of Orland township has announced himself as a candidate for tax collector for the town of Orland. He states that he is only seeking this office for one term.

Drunken Autoist Draws $200 Fine

A drunken driver giving his name as Ervin T. Cruise of Chicago was arrested by Deputy Ed. Geuther of Frankfort while driving on the Lincoln Highway. He had collided with a bridge Sunday night and his car was damaged.

Monday morning Cruise was given a hearing before Judge F. J. Kohlhaugen at Frankfort who fined him $200 and costs. Cruise claimed he had spent $60 for booze in a road house Sunday night.

Not having enough cash money with him he offered a check to Judge Kohlhaugen. The check was drawn on a Chicago bank and when the bank was asked if they would honor the check, they said they would. Judge Kohlhaugen however, is holding Cruise's car for security until the check clears thru.

Judge Kohlhaugen says that drunken drivers are a deadly nuisance, and everyone brought before him, is going to be assessed a fine to the limit of the law. If we only had more judges like Judge Kohlhaugen, there would be less driving by drunken fools.

Green Estate Is Divided

Under the will of Mrs. Mary M. Green of Frankfort, $2,500 is left to her adopted son, Wm. Green, and five shares of U. S. Steel company stock and 3 shares of stock in the Citizens Bank of Frankfort is given to Geo. Green, a son and his wife.

Another son, Frank Randall is to be paid $500 out of the estate.

The remainder of the property is to be divided equally among Wm. Green, Geo. Green and Randall.

Colored Cook Run Over By Engine

Alex Kyle, 51 years old, colored cook on the linemen's car on the E. J. & E., was killed Friday morning south of Frankfort by a pusher engine. He was crossing the track and failed to see the engine and another train was going by in the opposite direction. The colored man's left leg was cut off and he died within a few minutes after the accident. B. Zechlin the Frankfort undertaker took charge of the body which was later taken to the dead man's home in Chicago by Peter Folkers. Kyle's wife who also worked at the local linemen camp, left the same afternoon for her home in Chicago. A few days later the colored man's foreman died of pneumonia in Joliet.

Lankenau Beats Kampe at Caucuses

A red hot Republican caucus was held Saturday afternoon at the Frankfort Hall. The fight centered on the supervisorship of this township.

Wm. Lankenau present incumbent who is seeking re-election, received 141 votes and Wm. Kampe his opponent, 116 votes. Mr. Lankenau told the voters this was the last time he was going to seek the office of supervisor. Other candidates nominated are: Town Clerk, Henry Geuther, Assessor, Joe Kohl.

The People's Party caucus was held the same afternoon, but very little interest was shown. No candidates were put up for supervisor or assessor. Henry Geuther was nominated as town clerk, being the only name on the ticket.

Bowman Plant At Mokena Will Shut Down April 1st

The Bowman Dairy plant which has been in operation at Mokena for the past 18 years, will shut down April 1st as this plant is not getting enough tested milk to continue bottling operations. If the dairymen in this section will test so that enough milk can be secured the plant may reopen latter in the summer. When running at capacity this plant handles 40,000 pounds of milk a day.

Closing of this plant is a big blow to Mokena. Most of the employees have been given jobs at the Bowman bottling plant in Chicago and go back and forth to their work on the Rock Island.

Milk that has been coming to the plant from tested cattle will be hauled to Chicago in trucks each day. Closing of this plant also hits the Rock Island as the Bowman cars were hauled as express and brought in a revenue of $125 a day.

Nelse Peterson for County Treasurer

Nelse Peterson who is a candidate for the office of County Treasurer, has been a resident of Joliet Township some 37 years. Mr. Peterson who in 1917 and 1918, served Joliet Township as its Town Collector, is well qualified to assume the duties of the County Treasurers office and give the kind of service which the taxpayers have a right to expect. He handled the office of Town Collector in an efficient and courteous manner and turned in to the Town Treasury during his term nearly fourteen thousand dollars earnings of the office.

Nelse Peterson resides at 221 Draper Ave., is married and has a family consisting of four children, all attending school, one in Joliet Township High School and 3 in the public schools of Joliet. Bremen Farmers Anxious to Test

Farmers of Bremen are very anxious to get their cattle tested before April 1st and the veterinary has been so rushed that he will not be able to test all dairies in this section before the first. Most of the dairymen have been selling to small dealers in Chicago who have served notice that they cannot take any other than tested milk. A few of the local dairymen were recently shut off. Last Friday a meeting was held at Tinley Park between a number of dealers and the dairymen and the dealers agreed to take their milk if they would have their cows tested, hence the testing rush. Many of the dealers have been getting in the milk every day. Albert Kankakee and Manteno. Trucks haul in the milk every day. Albert Strassenberg has been hard hit by the test losing 26 head of cows out of a herd of 29 head. Several others also lost heavily.

A joint meeting of the Southwest Towns Chamber of Commerce and the village board of Orland was held at Orland Tuesday night with officials of the Wabash railroad relative to protecting the 143rd street crossing of the Wabash at Orland with gates and a watchman the village having passed an ordinance demanding that the Wabash install crossing gates. Assistant Superintendent Meyer and two other officials of the Wabash were present. They did not favor the crossing gate plan, contending that it would cost too much, but were willing to go in with a subway idea so a meeting has been set for next week between the Wabash, county and state officials regarding the proposed subway and the cost to be borne by the railroad, state and county. This crossing is a very dangerous one and was the scene of a fatal accident when a flier hit a sedan driven by A. Soderlund of Orland who was killed and his wife badly injured.

MORE MYSTERY

SYNOPSIS.—Traveling by canoe on the Mississippi, on his way to Biloxi, in the early days of the settlement of Louisiana, William Brampton, English spy, known to Indians and settlers as the "White Indian," sees a Natchez Indian post a declaration of war against the French. For his own purposes, he hastens to Biloxi to carry the news to Bienville, French governor. Brampton meets an old friend, Joe Labrador, Indian halfbreed, who warns him Bienville has threatened to hang him as a spy. Brampton refuses to turn back. He falls in with Jules and Basile Mattor, on their way to Biloxi to secure wives from a ship, the Maire, bringing women from France. At Biloxi Brampton protects a woman from a sergeant's brutality. She tells him she is Claire Dahlskaar, picked up in a raid in Paris. Evidently well bred and educated, she is a mystery to Brampton. He intervenes to prevent a man, English, known as "Old Six Fingers," following her to New Orleans. A Frenchman, Francois Narbonne, slightly demoted by stories he has heard of the riches of the New World, introduces himself. Bienville accuses Brampton of treachery, but the latter secures a respite from death by revealing the Natchez declaration of war. He is to await the arrival of a former companion, Damoan the Fox, who will exonerate or condemn him. Damoan has documents proving Brampton an English spy. Brampton receives a message from Claire, begging him to help her reach the English settlements. Brampton trusts Narbonne with a note to Claire promising to meet her at New Orleans. He plans his escape. After a struggle Brampton wrests the incriminating papers from Damoan and escapes from Biloxi. He meets the Mattors and they go to New Orleans in a sailing packet. At the landing place Brampton again encounters Joe Labrador, whom he sends to bring Claire to him.

"The three Orillant brothers? Can I trust them?"

"Two are here now. They are loyal to France," was the discouraging answer.

"Then there is no one I can approach under the seal of—"

"No one, monsieur. I must do your errand. Who is the man you wish word taken to?"

"You are to find Mademoiselle Dahlskaar, but just arrived from Biloxi. No one is to know you come to find her. You will say to her the three words, 'the White Indian.' Then lead her here if she is still inclined to go with me."

"A woman from the wife-ship! One of those women!" he groaned. "God of the white man! But you will make faces through a noose. With a price on your head—"

"I see I must do my own errand," I broke in. "When my friend believes evil of me he does evil in doing my business."

"Be still, my friend. You annoy me! I will find this woman with the outlandish name. I will speak the words. If she is fool enough to come with me I will bring her here to this dead village."

"She will come. Remember the need of secrecy. She had best wander to the edge of the settlement before you join her. There are those who would follow her. Even now there is one there, perhaps, a man with two fingers gone."

"Ha! The squat beast! He has been to the bayou."

"And one Francois Narbonne. Neither he, nor anyone, must know of the girl's departure. Now good luck and much speed, as the morning must see us far on our way."

"Holy saints! It is like the White Indian to break his neck to help a French wench. He could find no woman to help in all his years on the river until now. Very good. God in his wisdom sees fit to let monsieur play the fool. Why should I try to stop you? I go."

And he had faded into the darkness before I could give him a fitting reply. Of course there was something of madness in my project from the Canadian's unlighted point of view. I was reluctant to admit to myself even this much, but after reviewing the happenings of the last few days and remembering how few words I had spoken to mademoiselle, and how entirely ignorant I was of her antecedents—unless I retain my first estimate based on her soft hands and obvious poverty—I agreed that my old friend had cause to be displeased with me.

But what could I do after she had written that she surely would die unless I could help her make the coast? Refuse because she had made mistakes? Then how many of us would be licensed to ask for help? Pass her by because, very possibly, she had been frail in her virtues while living in an environment where virtue would find it most difficult to thrive? Then what manito would be lenient enough to listen to poor mortals' agonizing pleas? Strumpet or virgin, she was entitled to her chance, and I would do my best for her.

"Is it you, monsieur?" Labrador's anxious voice roused me from my thoughts.

"It is I. Where is the girl?"

"At your elbow, Mr. Brampton," came the answer in excellent English, and a soft hand touched mine. "Those men outside the cabin with lights! Are they looking for me?"

"No, mademoiselle. But it's well we were going. Lead the way, Joe."

"But you are traveling away from the river, monsieur!" she protested, dropping back into French.

"Only to swing back into it a few leagues above here. If you are to come with me you must trust to my judgment absolutely. I will say I think you are foolish to come."

"But not foolish to trust to you monsieur," she murmured.

"Good heavens, no! If you have the slightest doubt about your perfect safety with me—except we fall victims to a common danger—go back to your cabin at once."

"I have no doubts. You are saving me from destroying myself, monsieur," she whispered; and confounded me by beginning to sob.

"You'll betray both of us before we are a league from this spot," I warned. "Say your prayers! Make vows! Do something to hush your weeping! Faster, Joe!"

The good fellow quickened his pace, and I took the girl's hand in mine and we fairly ran for it until we came to the hidden canoes. Then Labrador said:

"I will go ahead. If you hear a night-bird call twice you will know I have met danger and then you must hide by the shore until the bird calls but once, meaning the trail is open again."

With this understanding he drew some distance ahead and led the way down the bayou. The girl crouched low in the pirogue behind me.

We moved slowly along the black water, and between lazy thrusts of the paddle I tried to talk with her.

"Why must you go to the English settlements? Have you friends there?"

"I have no friends anywhere, except that you be my friend," she whispered.

"But why to Virginia, or the Carolinas instead of Canada?"

"This country is terrible, monsieur," she said.

"You did not tell Sieur de Bienville that you were picked up in a raid."

I thought she did not intend to answer, but after a long pause she slowly said:

"What would be the good?"

And now she was speaking English with only the faintest of accent. I began to believe she was bilingual and used either tongue without being conscious of shifting.

"But if you could prove to his excellency—"

"I can prove nothing," she passionately hissed. "I have told you I have no friends. Shout the name of Dahlskaar from one end of France to the other, and none would be interested."

"Pardon; no one except your people."

"I am alone. An orphan."

"But your friends—at least those with whom you worked."

My voice became confused. I felt her soft hand rest for a moment on my hand as I held the paddle motionless.

"No, it is not the hand of a girl who has worked," I sorrowfully admitted.

With a jeering little laugh she said:

"Monsieur Brampton would prefer doing good deeds for the good."

"You are in trouble. I wish you well for your own sake. I will help you if I can. But one cannot help without wishing to know something. I could help you more intelligently if I could understand something of the nature of your trouble."

"There is nothing to learn. I came over on the immigrant ship. I am Claire Dahlskaar, as homeless and friendless as if I had dropped from another planet."

"Tell me this, did you protest when the police seized you and bundled you aboard the Maire?"

She astounded me by sadly confessing:

"I wanted to come. I lied when I told you I was taken in a raid. I went alone to the ship just before it was to sail and asked to be taken along."

"Good heavens! If you only had known—"

"I should do exactly the same if it were to be lived through again tomorrow, monsieur. You must either set me ashore, to make my own way, or accept me as you find me—nameless, friendless, a wail."

Why nameless when she was Claire Dahlskaar, I asked myself. But I did not ask her.

"I will not think evil of you. I wrote you from Biloxi—when it was doubtful if I could even save myself—that I would take you to the seaboard! I only hope your troubles will end when you get there."

"That was nicely said," she murmured, pausing between the words as if fighting to control herself. "If we get to the English towns I will find some work. I will be a servant—anything."

I thought of her soft hands; I already appreciated the refinement of her manner. No; I did not believe her troubles would be ended when she reached the English towns and she would be forced to make her own way. Our servants were supplied from the blacks, or ne'er-do-wells shipped to the plantations from England. As a servant she must abide with her class, and her very softness and her mental qualities would make her an object of scorn among her mates.

Between dips of the paddle I wondered if she would not have fared better to have remained in the valley and accepted a husband from among the women-hungry. This alternative was abhorrent to me almost as soon as I had considered it. I had told myself on the sands at Biloxi that she was entitled to her chance; and certainly a lonely cabin in some miserable lagoon, with a shaggy creature who lacked even the stability of an Indian hunter for a mate, constituted no "chance." Yet for the life of me I could see only a squalid outlook for her did we win across the eastern mountains.

The whole business discouraged analysis; and when Labrador gave his signal from the darkness ahead, and repeated it, I found my mental reaction to be refreshing. It meant danger, but that was more or less tangible. With a thrust of the paddle I had the pirogue snugly under the willows and was cautioning my passenger to be very quiet.

"Tonnerre! But who are you to treat me like this?" loudly demanded Labrador's voice. "Take your dirty hands from my face. To see if you know me? And who the black devil are you?"

This time I heard the murmur of a response and Labrador called out no more. The peril was obvious. Again I warned the girl to make no sound. We were kneeling on the marshy ground, and my hands held the pirogue from rustling against the reeds if the newcomers passed close enough to agitate it with their paddle strokes. Now they were sending little ripples into the swamp-grass, and by ear alone I told when the first craft passed our position.

From the number of paddles I judged it to be a long pirogue. Now it was above us and I was preparing to embark when there came a sound of other paddles, two of them. When directly opposite me a man spoke, and had I my musket by my side I should have been tempted to shoot at him through the darkness, for there was no mistaking the voice of Damoan the Fox.

CHAPTER VII

Up the River.

So the chase had turned from east to west and the Fox was hot on my trail. I thanked my medicine I had lost no time in meeting the girl. Until the Fox could reach New Orleans and make sure I was not hiding there the pursuit would be indirect.

Taking the girl by the arm, I assisted her into the pirogue and pushed off. We barely more than drifted with the sluggish current until I heard the soft dip of a paddle ahead. Then I allowed my own blade to betray me, and Labrador's voice was calling:

"Good evening, Messieurs."

"It is I," I whispered as the pirogue grated against his canoe. "I saw them and him."

"Sacred! He held a pistol to my throat while he pawed over my face with his dirty paw to see if it was you. But my talk satisfied him I knew nothing. He goes to la Nouvelle Orleans."

"He thinks I am there. Did he say anything to show how sure he is?"

"Nothing, except to tell his pirogue Choctaws that the trail would be picked up when they left the bayou."

"He'll find no trail," I said.

"He'll find a woman is missing. And there will be some signs left," declared Joe, now using the Choctaw trade jargon that the girl might not understand.

But I did not fear any such results. There was nothing known in New Orleans to connect me with the girl's disappearance. The settlers would testify that the girl was very sad, that she stepped out of a cabin and did not return. It would be believed that she had wandered away and fallen into the river, or become lost.

As for finding any signs of our passing to and from the Indian village the chances were his Choctaws would destroy any traces in tracking back and forth during the night. But the long river-road was the logical one for an escaping English spy to take, once it was known he had not made for Pensacola; and I believed the Fox would make haste to cut me off from gaining the mouth of the Ohio.

The close air of the bayou was being freshened by a breeze from the lake. It was like emerging from a hot tunnel. Labrador's canoe slithered among the brakes, and came to a stop, and as I drew abreast of him he announced:

"I return to la Nouvelle Orleans, my friends."

In the Choctaw jargon he added, "If they go north I shall trail them."

"They will go north," I assured him. With that we parted, he to paddle up the bayou, while I took the girl into whatever dangers Fate had stored up for us once we quit the Iberville for the Mississippi.

I could not get used to mademoiselle. If she had impressed me as being slight and frail of physique on Ship Island she now seemed little more than a child. For she had followed my advice, and had shifted from her funeral black gown to a garb more suitable for rough travel. From an Indian crone she had purchased some boot-leggings, a short skirt of fiber bark, stained white and red—the sacred colors of the Natchez—and completed her attire with a blouse of linen she had brought overseas. Her yellow hair was drawn back and arranged in braids. Her face would have been boyish if not for the sensitive mouth and the sadness of her eyes.

"And this river flows from the great river?" she asked for the tenth time as we made our way up the Iberville.

"It is merely a mouth of the Mississippi at high water. It flows into Lake Maurepas, where we camped and I showed you the cross cut by Iberville a score of years ago."

She was silent for some time, and then proved she was observing by saying:

"Monsieur does not look behind him. Now, I look back every few minutes, thinking to behold the savages."

"There is nothing behind us to fear, little one. It is when we strike into the Mississippi that we shall keep our eyes very wide open."

"It is terrible, this great river that we seek," she murmured.

She was behind me on the bundle of blankets. I heard a suspicious sound and glanced back to find her striving to muffle a sudden outburst of sobs by lying face down on the blankets.

"Hush!" I sternly commanded. "The great river is our good friend. It is so big and wide we can hide from our enemies without leaving it."

"I hate it!" she fiercely whipped back, lifting her head and glaring angrily at me through her tears. "I hated it while at the cabin at Marlot and his family. I wish we could travel afoot, overland, to the coast. Why must we go the long way around when we could travel overland?"

"To save time," I told her with a smile. "We haven't time to go the shortest way. There are more than ten thousand warriors between the river and Carolina. There are a scant four thousand of these who will admit any feeling of friendship for the English. We must go nearly to the coast before we will be free from the red danger; for there are no settlements in the valley of Virginia. In the valley of the Shenandoah the Catawbas and Cherokees go north on the war path against the Five Nations, while down that path come the Iroquois of the Five Nations to take southern scalps. I do not say these things to add to your uneasiness, Mademoiselle Dahlskaar, but to indicate how widespread is the danger-zone, and to show the need of traveling by water as far as possible."

"Forgive me. You are very wise," she sighed, raising her big eyes to stare into mine. "I have seen so little of life. I am so ignorant."

I faced to the front and scowled at the bend ahead. For the time I had fallen beneath a spell and had forgotten she was not an unsophisticated child. Her plea of ignorance did not harmonize with the mystery behind her, nor with the disturbing testimony of her soft hands coupled to poverty.

"I have said something which displeases monsieur?" she timidly asked.

I flashed a mechanical smile over my shoulder, shook my head, and explained.

Claire may be interesting, but she is a terrible handicap on a trip like this. What will she do next?

Bird's Mother Love

Example of Heroism

The boy who "stood on the burning deck, whence all but he had fled," has won the immortality of a well-known poem, but probably a certain skylark will not find her poet, although she certainly deserves one.

While beating out a field fire at Felt-ham, in Middlesex, firemen noticed a skylark sitting on her nest on the ground, in the direct path of the flames. The bird continued to sit on her eggs with dense smoke rolling round her, and even when the flames caught the grass of which the nest was constructed she did not stir until the firemen were close upon her.

So struck were the men with the bird's heroism and devotion that they determined to save her home at all costs. They set about isolating the nest, and were so successful that, although the fire spread all around, the nest remained intact.—London Tit-Bits.

Glacial Period Floods

When the ice began to melt in earnest toward the close of the glacial period, floods occurred and formed rivers that would dwarf many of our largest ones today. So great were these torrents, says Nature Magazine that enormous boulders were rolled along like pebbles, and thus transported miles beyond their original positions.

Backache Wearing You Out?

Every day find you miserable with backache? Suffer sharp, stabbing pains? Feel lame and stiff—always tired, nervous and dispirited? Then look to your kidneys! Your kidneys are the blood filters. Perhaps they have failed to properly rid the blood of body poisons. Naturally, then, you suffer the injurious effects of this slow poisoning. Don't risk neglect! If your kidneys need help, use Doan's Pills. No other kidney diuretic is so well recommended nor so successful. Ask your neighbor!

An Illinois Case

Mrs. Edward Thomas, 412 E. King St., Polo, Ill., says: "A cold settled in my kidneys and caused pains in my back. When I bent over, catches took me across my kidneys and it was hard to straighten. Dizzy spells came over me when specks came before my eyes. The kidney secretions were scanty. Doan's Pills soon rid me of the trouble."

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.NURSERY RHYME

JUDGE THE MAN

THE MAN FOR JUDGE
RALPH C. AUSTIN
 CANDIDATE FOR REPUBLICAN NOMINATION FOR COUNTY JUDGE

The COUNTY COURT is the home and family Court. It takes care of neglected and delinquent children, grants mothers pensions, sends the insane, the feeble-minded and the epileptic to hospitals.

The COUNTY COURT enforces the constitutional guarantee of just and lawful taxation on home and property.

EXPERIENCE and FITNESS should be required of the COUNTY JUDGE who looks after the unfortunate children the same as people demand that the teacher who educates their children and the doctor who treats them shall be well trained and thoroughly efficient.

This is the day of experts. Should this not apply to public office as well as to trade, profession or business.

RALPH C. AUSTIN has had fourteen years experience in handling County Court cases. He is regarded by his fellow lawyers as an expert on Special Assessments. He is forty years old and married. He has made a special study of children's cases. Working with a nationally known specialist, Dr. Herman Adler, and with the co-operation of all the heads of children's charities of Will County he has worked out a program for the County Court that will mean the saving of dollars and the reduction of delinquency and crime.

WORLD'S GREATEST SHOW

The picturization of "Ben-Hur", a Tale of the Christ, by General Lew Wallace has occupied the stage of the WOODS THEATRE, since Feb. 8th and has played twice daily since. New York, Boston, Chicago and Philadelphia have the only presentations of the great Epic this season. First, a word of history to the younger generation. "Ben-Hur" was put forth by Gen. Lew Wallace in 1880, and for forty-five years that book enjoyed a circulation second only to Holy Writ.

It is a tale intimately the founding of Christianity into the environment and lives of the characters, the young Ben-Hur being pictured as a contemporary of the Saviour. A beautiful romance links the Jewish Prince and Esther, the daughter of his steward Simonides.

The story begins in Bethlehem with the Star and adoration of the Wise Men, then deals with the oppression of Judea and the ruin of the Hur family by Roman edict. The hero is successively a slave in the galleys, the by a turn of fortune, a Roman dumvir, adopted son, the richest subject in Asia, winner of the Antioch chariot race, and then animated by the Jewish ideal of a temporal Messiah he raises a legion to take up arms for Jesus of Nazareth. But the Prince of Peace comes not into a worldly kingdom. Ben-Hur is bidden put up his sword, becoming a humble follower of the Master. His long lost Mother and Sister are restored to him and are cured of sickness by the Divine Healing.

For nearly a quarter of a century from Nov. 29, 1899, the stage play of "Ben-Hur", founded on the above, was the most popular stage attraction in America. This has been succeeded in turn by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer motion picture, which was begun in 1923 and completed December, 1925. Abraham L. Erlanger has seen to it that the New "Ben-Hur" is a faithful picturization of book and play, but with the immensely grander resources of the Motion Picture Art, especially in the Sea Fight and the Chariot Race which are the greatest thrills of all time. Ramon Novarro heads the cast of 150,000 players. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have expended $4,000,000 on the picture, and it was money well spent.

The Law Makes The County Treasurer a Strong Factor in Making Assessments

The laws of the State of Illinois as enacted in 1898 and revised in 1923, make the County Treasurer ex officio supervisor of assessments in his county.
Whose duty is to assemble all assessors and deputy assessors in his county before April 1st for consultation and shall give such instructions to them as shall tend to uniformity in the action of the assessors.

The supervisor of assessments is granted the same power as assessors to assess, make changes or alterations in the assessment of property.

It, therefore, follows that the County Treasurer should have a general knowledge of the values of all classes of property.

My wide experience in different lines of business activity exceptionally tends to qualify me for just such a position.

Legal Phraseology

Escrow is a writing which has been fully executed but which has been placed in the keeping of a third party, to be held by him until such time as the specified conditions under which the instrument was prepared have been fulfilled.

Cork Insulation

A combination of cork and concrete for building houses is the latest innovation being tried out in England. It is claimed that the combination insulates the houses, both against cold and noise.

August Maue, the present county superintendent of schools, is a native of Frankfort township and well known to most of our people. He was a high-school student in the Mokena Public School and, when he had finished his college studies and had secured a degree, he became principal of our school. He was eminently successful here and remained until he was called to Joliet to become principal of the Broadway school.

Mr. Maue has been uniformly successful, making steady progress until he became county superintendent. He has placed Will County upon the map in school affairs. Our people have a just pride in his success.

He is Treasurer of the Illinois State Teacher's Reading Circle Board, and handles thousands of dollars a year. He is Treasurer of the Northeastern Section of the Illinois State Teachers' Association. He is a member of the State Course of Study. He has been a member of the legislative committee of the County Superintendent's Association for many years.

He is eminently a school man, capable, open-minded, just, and true, unceasing in his efforts to aid all the boys and girls of our county. He is always seeking that which is best for the children, not always, however, the popular thing with those who think that old ways are best.

He knows the subject-matter of education; he knows teaching; he knows boys and girls; and he is always ready to aid his teachers, in times of trouble as well as in times when the work is successful. He retains the confidence of pupils, teachers and patrons.

Slogan is, "a high-school education for every boy and girl in Will County." To that end he has established two-year and three-year high schools in various centers. Mokena has a three-year high school which demonstrates how these schools aid our older boys and girls. Our community is proud of its teachers and its school. No other institution has done so much to boost our town.

May he live long and prosper.

The regular mid-week services are continued also the last Friday the church had a fine get-together discussing plans for a new parsonage. Every one present spoke of the occasion as a great success. Its Advantage

They were discussing the advantages of the various college courses. "So you've decided on an art course instead of a scientific course?" inquired the girl. "Oh, yes," answered the youth, "it seemed the better course for me." Her next question was, "Why?" and his reply to that was, "Well, everybody says it's easier to forget."

Frosted on the Inside

After years of research work a new and improved 60-watt frosted lamp has been developed which has two points of superiority over types now in use.

1. The new lamp is frosted on the inside instead of the outside of the glass. Thus eyes are protected from glare, and yet it is as easy to clean as an unfrosted lamp.

2. It is constructed on new principles which insure 12% greater lighting efficiency.

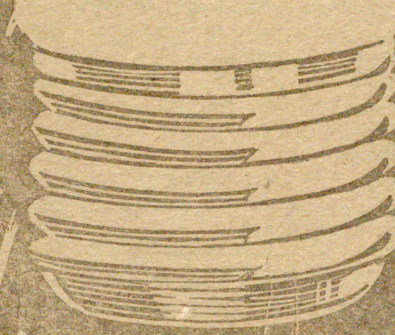

This new lamp will be handled on the same free installation and exchange basis as other 60-watt lamps.

Narrowness and Breadth in Religion

By REV. H. OSTROM, D. D.
Extension Department, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—I am the Truth.—John 14:6

If Jesus had said that He is one of the truths how manifestly that would have opened the door to ten thousand speculations. Men say the Truth, where is the breadth? How confining, how narrow! But the claim is narrow as arithmetic is narrow, that is, it is exact. It is narrow just as oil and water are not water. Indeed it reminds one of the scientific laboratory.

Men are willing to grant precision to studies in material things. They want the fractional, the specific there. They boast of their precision, but when precision is insisted upon concerning the Savior of the soul they forthwith designate it as narrowness. They say, "We know," and shut the door to all objectors. But when the subject is the Savior of the soul, they demand that we consider it as competing with other arguments and needing only to be classified as fit for their company.

Why should it be thought that a Caesar Augustus should do anything else but bring forth his pagan theories even if he subtracted some from them, try to vamp them onto the teaching of Him who is the Truth? That, surely, unless his proud heart yielded. Why should it be thought that a Nicodemus would at the moment accept the Truth, unless his proud Pharisee heart yielded? We see in Paul the force of what we are saying. This man, a Pharisee of the Pharisees, does yield. In that cry, "What wilt thou have me do?" the proud boast of the man collapses and the real majesty of Jesus' claim appears in its commanding reality.

Why should men think today that because a man has accomplished a few mixings he should be heard on how men can be saved? Why should a man, because he is peerless in physics, be counted upon to pronounce about the credibility of holy Scripture? Is a man guaranteed to make good bread because he can play a piano well?

Ah, it is the attempt to classify "the wisdom of men" as a necessary accompaniment and abetter to the gospel that is confusing and betraying the people. Its legitimate result is a profuse mixture of speculation such as would not be tolerated for running a ship in the storm or running a bank in town.

The moment you allow here what is commonly designated "breadth," you fall into a maze of speculations. And to place the saving of the soul at the mercy of speculation is to make it forever unsure. To place the redemption of the soul upon the basis of speculation is to have no guaranteed good news to tell about it. To place prayer upon the basis of speculation is to practice addressing the atmosphere. To place heaven upon the basis of speculation is to sound the death knell of hope. To place the outlook for the world upon the basis of speculation is to increase intrigue and make a bankruptcy of virtue.

"The Truth!" Hush, men, your guesses and your ventures. What criticism have you to make upon either His claims or His loving offering of Himself for you, once for all? Why listen to the revel of your guessing? Why let contending voices, born of ancient falsehood, dull your hearing? Have you lost your way in the forest? There is one sun. Have you tossed in the storm until the extent of the sea made you incapable of picturing at all plainly the shore? There is one safe sheltered harbor. Did you cry in distress until your very excitement served only to increase your confusion? There is one heart that can solace you. Do not delay. Accept Him. He is the Truth.

"For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and they shall turn away their ears from the Truth and shall be turned unto fables."

What, after all, is the value of all men think they know, if they do not know the Truth?

Challenge to Atheism

If you practice the worship of the beautiful and the true, if the sanctity of morality speaks to your heart, if all beauty and all truth bear you to the home of the holy life; if when you have come there you veil your head, and purposely overawe thought and language, so that no limited utterance may escape you in front of the Infinite—how do you dare to speak of atheism? If, indeed, your faculties in simultaneous vibration have never given forth that one great strain that we call God, I have nothing more to say; you are wanting in the essential and characteristic element of our nature.—Rennan.

Taking Up the Yoke

It is not in understanding a set of doctrines; not in outward comprehension of the "scheme of salvation," that rest and peace are to be found, but in taking up, in all lowliness and meekness, the yoke of the Lord Jesus Christ.—F. W. Robertson.

REVIEW—THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

REVIEW—The Gospel of John.

GOLDEN TEXT—These are written, that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye may have life in His name.—John 20:31.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Beautiful Stories Told by John.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Greatest Things in John's Gospel.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Great Scenes in John's Gospel.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Great Teachings of John's Gospel.

Happily we have come to one time at least when the quarterly review is easy and a pleasure. The teacher's supreme aim should be to make Jesus as real to his pupils as He was to the disciples when here upon earth, for the "Word made flesh" is now dwelling among us "full of grace and truth," revealing God (John 1:14, 18). The best way to reveal the teacher's lessons will be to grasp the central purpose of John in writing his book, gather the central teaching of each separate lesson and use it in proving the central proposition. John clearly states his purpose in 20:31. Two things are set forth in this verse.

1. That Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God.

2. That through believing in Him, eternal life is received.

It should be the teacher's aim to establish this truth and to accomplish this glorious purpose in the lives of all his pupils.

January 3.—In this lesson Jesus is presented as the eternal Word existing with God before all worlds, the almighty Creator, the source of light and life, made flesh in order to reveal God to man.

January 10.—John the Baptist testifies that Jesus is the Lamb of God. This truth was testified unto him by a voice from heaven and the descent of the Holy Spirit upon Him (Matt. 3:16, 17). Andrew, Philip and Nathanael corroborate John's testimony by declaring that Jesus is the Messiah of whom Moses and the prophets did write—the very Son of God.

January 17.—Jesus is the bestower of eternal life. He is the only begotten Son of the Father, who gives eternal life to those who believe in Him. Since God alone can give life; Jesus is divine.

January 24.—Jesus testifies to the Samaritan woman that He is the Messiah. His ability to disclose the secrets of the woman's heart and life convinces her that He is divine.

January 31.—The creative act by which five thousand men, besides women and children, were fed from a few small loaves and fishes, with a superabundance left over, demonstrates the deity of Jesus.

February 7.—Jesus is divine, because He opened the eyes of the man born blind. So unusual was this miracle that such a thing was never heard of "since the world began." The man whose eyes were opened, confessed Jesus and worshiped Him as the Son of God.

February 14.—Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God, because He is the Good Shepherd. In the Old Testament, Jehovah is set forth as the True Shepherd (Ps. 23, Ezek. 34). The true shepherd devotes his life to the welfare of his sheep, even to the extent of laying down his life for them. This Jesus did, therefore He is the promised Messiah.

February 21.—Jesus is divine because at His command, Lazarus, a man dead four days, was raised to life.

February 28.—Undivided love to God is man's supreme obligation. The Second Commandment is like unto the First, in that it centers in love.

March 7.—Jesus is divine, because He came from God and went to God (John 13:3). Though Jesus boldly claimed to be the Lord, yet He stooped to render the most menial service to His disciples.

March 14.—Jesus claimed equality with God and therefore asked His disciples to place their faith in Him as the divine being, just the same as in God.

March 21.—Jesus proved His deity by coming forth from the grave. This is the unquestioned seal of His deity.

Water of Life

If ye know what He is preparing for you ye would be too glad. He will not, it may be, give you a full draught till ye come up to the well-head and drink, yea, drink abundantly, of the pure river of the water of life that proceedeth out from the throne of God and from the Lamb.—Samuel Rutherford.

Moody on Enthusiasm

Enthusiasm means "in God"; and I can't understand how any man can realize his standing before God and not be on fire 365 days in the year. Any man who goes into business and doesn't throw his heart into it doesn't succeed. Now, why not go into the Lord's work as earnestly as into athletics?—D. L. Moody.

Purpose of Prayer

The purpose of prayer is to get God's will done.—S. D. Gordon.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
Editor of "HEALTH"

PREVENTING RICKETS

RICKETS is a disease of infancy and very early childhood. It is most common among bottle-fed babies, whose food does not contain enough bone bulking matter, or in breast-fed babies where, on account of the mother's physical condition, the milk is poor in quality. This may occur if the babies have followed each other too rapidly and the mother has not had time to regain her strength after nursing one baby before she is called upon to nurse another.

The disease comes on about the time of the first teeth. The child is irritable, has fever and sweating at night and is pale, flabby and puny. There are hard knobs on the ribs in front, where they join the cartilages. The head is large and the teeth are slow in appearing and badly formed. The large bones, especially those in the legs, are bent. The child is nervous, irritable and subject to fits.

Much attention has been given to the disease in recent years. It is Miller property near the place. Mrs. Miller is moving to Chicago.

Miss Lydia Peglau is German Deaconess hospital Chicago with stomach trouble.

Mrs. Mulfinger of Chicago of the former presiding the German M. E. church spending a few days with Mrs. C. C. Bettenhausen.

Harry W. Bettenhausen to move into the Funk occupied by August Peglau.

GERMAN M. E. N. Special services will be Good Friday morning at 10:30. An Easter program held Easter morning at the Sunday school. After gram an Easter sermon will be given by Rev. Jechum.

Next Sunday is Palm Sunday school at 9:30, 10:30. Epworth League meeting at 7:30.

The Pre-Easter services Tinley Park Methodist church Sunday March 28th close at 10:30.

Experience for three years now has shown that, simply by sunlight and cod liver oil, rickets can be controlled and practically prevented.

OUR WEAK SPOTS

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES was a doctor as well as a poet. So when he wrote the "One Horse Shay," he evidently had the peculiarities of the human body in mind.

The idea the old New England deacon had that the reason a carriage broke down but never wore out was that each carriage had a weak spot that gave way first. So in old legends we find the same idea about the human body. Achilles' mother dipped him in the River Styx and so made him invulnerable, except his heel, where her hand held him. Siegfried bathed in dragon's blood, only a leaf fell on his shoulder and left a weak spot which later was the cause of his death.

These old legends all recognize that the human body has its weak spots. Where are they?

This question is answered by Doctor Schweisheimer of Stuttgart, who says that the Japanese realized, centuries ago, that there are certain danger spots in the body and built their system of jui-jitsu on this knowledge.

The most sensitive spot in the body is Adam's apple. A hard blow on this point or pressure with the thumbs will interfere with breathing and swallowing and cause severe pain. Every school boy knows that the points of the thumbs, pressed into the little hollows below and behind the ears, will cause severe pain and quickly subdue the largest opponent. Every school boy also knows that a sharp blow with the edge of the open hand on the back of the neck is very unpleasant. It is known in school-boy slang as showing you "how to kill rabbits." It is not only unpleasant, but it is also not free from danger as too hard a blow may break the neck and cause sudden death.

Every boxer knows the effect of a short, sharp, upper cut to the point of the jaw. I have seen fighters "put to sleep" for more than the necessary ten seconds by a short, snappy blow to the chin, when the boxer's glove did not move more than six inches. The force was transmitted through the jaw bone to the base of the skull.

Another weak spot is the region of the back low down over the kidneys. Many a boxer has been slowly worn down and put out without a mark on his face by repeated kidney punches. Everybody knows how lanky Bob Fitzsimmons floored Jim Corbett by the famous solar plexus blow.

Some parts of the body are much more subject to injury than others. Out of 300,000 accidents of all kinds, 53 per cent were injuries to the arm and hand, 28 per cent to the foot and leg, 8 per cent to the trunk and 9 per cent to the head.

NELLIE REVELL Says:

THE musical intelligentsia have contracted a habit of sneering at much of our popular music—the tunes that are turned out by the bale from Tin Pan alley. To me such an attitude is a good bit like looking down on silver automobiles, comfortable shoes or mother's home-made pies. They perhaps could be a trifle more decorative and artistic, but after all there isn't anything that quite matches them when it comes to keeping the morale and the happiness of the community up to such a high level.

How conclusively this was proven during the recent world disagreement. Men the nations had plenty of, powder they were well supplied with, but not all the powder in the world would have done those soldiers much good had they not had some means of keeping up their spirits. Many a charge went over the top inspired by the various war songs of the nations, and many a victory was achieved by fighters who sang while they battled. The genesis of almost every one of those songs was in Tin Pan alley of New York or some other city. The men did not sing the operas nor the music one goes to the symphony to hear; always it was the simple ballad of the popular song-writer, and these modest lyricists, I am sure, contributed just as much toward the winning of the war as did all the munitions factories.

As it was in war so it is in peace, which has many if not as bloody battles. To me the man that can make a whole nation laugh and forget its troubles means more to the life of the people than all the intelligentsia lumped together.

The man or woman who is pitchforked into uncongenial work is sincerely to be pitied—and I have no sympathy coming on that score, whatever. I was born into the amusement world and in my veins flowed printers' ink, so it is no wonder I have been in love with my work, whether it was the duties of a reporter or the rush of a theatrical press agent's excitement. If I had my career to reset I wouldn't make a single revision in the whole galaxy.

My first work was in the newspaper business and the fourth estate is a hard taskmaster. The hours are long, the responsibilities many and heavy, the nerves are under a continual strain and the pay is small compared to the amount of intelligence and initiative demanded. But there are other compensations than salary. The newspaper worker gets a satisfaction from his labors known to few other professions. Never a day goes by that the job does not pay a large bonus in human understanding, one that the most concrete-hearted cashier can never hold out on. It is worth some sacrifice to be one of those who blow back the push of life and look at the seams.

'Jever come across a bunch of old keys, that you once kept shiny with use, and wonder what they were all for? I did the other day and I spent an hour when I should have been writing this column in sorting them and finding in my mind the locks they used to fit. There was one for the office I used to have; the last time it had turned it fastened a door between me and the world of active service. Another had given admittance to an apartment that was home to me. There was a thin, flat one for the desk where I had planned and written many a story for this show or that. There were some for trunks, steamer and wardrobe and cut trunks, that I had not seen for almost six years. Some of them I will use again, others never; but I shall keep them all. There is one door they can always unlock—the door of happy memories.

Zoe Beckley, who ranks with the best as a newspaper woman here or anywhere else, dropped in the other day for the express purpose of delivering this story. An out-of-town newspaper man had, it seemed, been sent to New York to cover the story of a great man's demise. On arriving he went straight from the train to the office of the evening paper, for Miss Beckley had been his pal and from her he expected to get the salient features of the famous person's life and death.

"Oh, don't ask me," sulked Zoe. "I'm off him. Here I have been doing sympathetic stories about him fifteen years—and now he goes and dies for the morning papers."

Only one who was unable to walk for many long months can know what intense delight it is for me to get around on my own feet a bit once again. I feel just like the little boy who gets up Christmas morning at four o'clock and scoots down to see the Christmas tree and the presents and then finds so many things he wants that he can't make up his mind which to take first. I go from one window to the other in my room, from the table to my chair, to my desk and back to the windows, hardly pausing long enough to realize what I came there for. Anyone who doesn't believe there is such a thing as the modern-day spirit of unrest ought to drop in to see me.

Your own good faith must be your chiefest care; No matter what some others do—play fair.

Community Smile

It's so easy to acquire --- especially here in Oak Lawn --- The place of Prosperity Progressiveness, of Community Spirit, Neighborliness and general Good Fellowship.

Medical science teaches us that it takes just ~~one-fifth~~ the muscular energy of a frown to produce a Smile. And how much more attractive we are, when our countenances are wreathed in a smile. It makes life and all the world look brighter.

You can't help but like to do business with people who always Smilingly greet you. Why not show the world that you too, are happy to be living in this enterprising Community.
